75 year anniversary of Shawnee Drive Congregation

"Serving the community is our legacy in all the ways; from helping the schools make sure students have the supplies they need so they can just show up and have fun to creating a church space where everyone is accepted." - Haumana, Shawnee Drive

Celebrating 75 years of Olathe Congregation

Olathe Congregation just had its 75th anniversary as well and has been selected for this issue's Congregation Highlight. Olathe Congregation has had a year rich with youth and family ministry; From bible reenactments on Sunday morning to baby blessings to picnics in the park.

For 75 years, Olathe Community of Christ has been more than a congregation—it has been a family. Rooted in love, belonging, and service, this intergenerational community brings together a rich tapestry of people, perspectives, and lived experiences. In a world often divided by political and ideological differences, Olathe continues to prioritize relationships over division, finding unity not in thinking alike, but in caring for one another. Across generations, its members share a commitment to building meaningful connections, nurturing families, and making a positive impact beyond their walls. Seventy-five years later, their greatest legacy remains the community they continue to create.

Midlands at Peace Forum

Community of Christ International Headquarters held our recurring Peace Forum in October. This year awarding Bill McKibbins with the International Peace Award. Midlands showed up in strong spirit and participation. See Tom & Susan Webber pictured on the left and the Grover/Norman/Collins clan right.

Hope from a Midlands Young Adult

Josie Jenson is a member of The Highlands Congregation and a first-year college student at MCC Maple Woods focusing on her gen-eds and considering future study in psychology. Josie loves painting, art and playing the piano. Right now she's loving playing hymns.

When asked what gives her hope in this moment, what's she's most excited to see happening in Midlands Josie answered the dinner church.

"The Lift." Jenson elaborated, "I'm looking forward to that. I'm hoping that'll be a new thing that'll be a blessing to many people not just church people. That's kind of the goal as Christians, to be a blessing to other people. The way it's framed is a new way of thinking for me. It's framed not as trying to get people to go to church, but to focus on and create a meaningful space for unchurched people."

Alli Arnold - 10 years Serving Olathe Pastor Team

"I'm grateful for the space I've gotten to make for other expressions of spiritual formation that might be familiar or routine to us. My hope is that younger people in Olathe congregation have seen and felt that there is space and there are lots of way to fully spiritually connect and express yourself. I personally don't connect as much outwardlly or in big groups, but in more interpersonal practices. Spirituality that is accessible anywhere has become incredibly meaningful to me."

Alli has served on the Olathe pastor team for 10 years. You can't ask one person in the congregation about her impact without many voices nearby excitedly weighing in. Her leadership and and ministry have been impactful and we're excited to see what she does in her ministry next.

THIS IS THE WAY with ROB HEVERLING

your mission center president

I am not a good golfer. When I was a young man, I owned a bag of used clubs. Put me on a scramble team, and my mates could count on a couple of long, straight, tee shots.
There is something about standing on a hilltop tee box, a par 5 with the lush fairway cut out of the rough, showing the way to the green. The hole unfolds before you, framed by grand trees and shimmering ponds. And then, the head of your driver finds the perfect path in your backswing. From that crescendo, you uncoil with a bit of violence, like a trebuchet, and strike the ball with pure power, and it rockets off the tee, rising above the horizon, its trajectory looking like it may never come down.

Perhaps because it's rare for me, that kind of golf shot feels transcendent.
This is like experiencing the grace of God. Transcendent.

Presbyterian pastor Tim Keller once said, "God's grace is not a potion that we drink to escape reality; it is a power that transforms reality."

At Graceland College, my advisor was Professor of English and Writing, Jon Wallace. Jon had us read Rabbit, Run, a John Updike novel.

There is a memorable golf scene in Rabbit, Run, where the main character, Harry "Rabbit" Angstrom, is playing golf with an Episcopal priest named Jack Eccles. In this part, Eccles is interrogating Rabbit about why he left his wife. Rabbit is just trying to play golf, but Eccles's pestering about his failed marriage is making him angry. It's a tension-filled scene.
Much more remarkable than my description of a tee shot, here's Updike's version:

[Rabbit's] heart is hushed, held in mid-beat, by anger. He doesn't care about anything except getting out of this tangle. He wants it to rain. In avoiding looking at Eccles, he looks at the ball, which sits high on the tee and already seems free of the ground. Very simply, he brings the clubhead around his shoulder into it. The sound has a hollowness, a singleness he hasn't heard before. His arms force his head up, and his ball is hung way out, lunarly pale against the beautiful black blue of storm clouds. . . . It recedes along a line straight as a ruler-edge. Stricken; sphere, star, speck. It hesitates, and Rabbit thinks it will die, but he's fooled, for the ball makes its hesitation the ground of a final leap: with a kind of visible sob takes a last bite of space before vanishing in a falling. "That's it!" he cries and, turning to Eccles with a grin of aggrandizement, repeats, "That's it."

Like me, Rabbit is not a good golfer. In that moment, he feels stress, anger, and a sense of failure. But then his reality is momentarily transformed.

This is the path of a disciple of Jesus. Or at least it's been my experience of feeling undone, anxious, and self-critical, but through disciplined prayers of praise to God, thanksgiving, repentance, and asking for help, I am gifted these moments of grace when my strained reality is altered. I see new pathways, and I feel loved and hopeful again.
Experiencing God's grace is like having your short-circuiting life rewired.
Oh, it will short-circuit again. But the love of God will be there... again.
This is the way.

Shalom, Shalom, Rob
